The Next Four Years: Justice in the Biden Era

“Our criminal justice system cannot be just unless we root out the racial, gender, and income-based disparities in the system.”

-- Biden-Harris Transition Plan, Build Back Better.

Will they live up to their pledge?

A week after the 2020 election, President-elect Joe Biden and Vice-President-elect Kamala Harris presented an ambitious agenda for criminal justice reform. Many were skeptical that there was bipartisan support to get it done. But with Democrats set to control both houses of Congress, has the likelihood for success has improved? The stage is set for a genuine national debate on the contours of justice reform—and perhaps most significantly a long-overdue reimagining of policing.

The 2021 Harry Frank Guggenheim Symposium on Crime in America will look at the debate, how it fits in with what we currently know and may anticipate about the state of crime and violence in the U.S., with a special emphasis during the second day on the risks and opportunities that this fast-evolving landscape poses to the challenge of reforming American policing.
